To Whom It May Concern,

It is with great honor that I can write on behalf of Marianne Sadik, a current student of mine. Since the first day she started my class, I could see the excitement and determination she had to excel in academics. This was highly refreshing since she is in my Advanced Placement Biology course. Throughout this school year of getting to know Marianne, I have come to realize that her thirst for knowledge and her drive are unrivaled amongst her peers. Marianne is a true unique individual that will go far in her life's journey.

Marianne has a passion for science and it can be seen in the quality of work that she provides. AP Biology calls for a more thorough and in depth understanding of the topics presented along with students having to explain the phenomena they come across. No matter the topic, Marianne presents exceptional work with vast detail. When she struggles on a concept, she asks questions to make sure she has a better grasp on it. She strives for mastery of the material.

As teachers, we discuss with one another how to improve our courses and the students we see excelling in our classes. Marianne is a name that many teachers recognize, and they smile when they hear her name. She makes an impact in our classes because she is that stellar of a student. In this time of distance learning, full comprehension of the topics is a difficult task to do. Even more so when you only meet online for classes twice a week. Throughout this entire year Marianne has been a full participant and reached out for further practice when the time called for it. She is an exemplary student that any teacher is lucky to have in their class.

Regarding her future, Marianne wants to pursue a high academic education at a competitive university. I believe this is a great fit for her because she has the strength, empathy, and tenacity to be successful in that profession. While she excels academically, she has interests outside of education that involves various clubs, organizations, or even playing the drums. Marianne's interests allow her to be more of a renaissance individual, meaning she is able to relate to a multitude of individuals based on their interests. This will be a great quality to have when she successfully works her future job or any aspect of her life because it will allow her to be more sympathetic and empathetic to anyone she meets. With Marianne's determination and passionate dreams, she will succeed in the future.

Kind Regards,
